DEAR PAW'S CORNER: While checking my little Terrier, "Fritz," after a walk, I found one small tick just hanging on his fur. I don't know what I would have done if it had attached itself to his skin. What's the procedure? Should I rush him to the vet if a tick attaches itself? – Carla in Albany, New York

DEAR CARLA: Excellent work in checking Fritz's coat right away after your walk! Ticks are so common now that it's important to check after every outdoor foray, even if your dog never leaves the sidewalk. A tick check is a fast way to make sure – just by running your hand along your pet's coat, down and then up.

You do not need to rush your dog to the vet for an embedded tick. You can remove it yourself. Here's how:

- Grab a pair of tweezers and a magnifying glass. If you have surgical gloves and a tick remover tool, even better.
- Have another person hold your dog still while you locate the embedded tick.
- Carefully grasp the tick with the tweezers as close to the dog's skin as possible, near its head.
- Slowly, steadily pull the tick out. Don't jerk. Place the tick into a plastic bag with a little isopropyl alcohol.
- Clean the dog's skin with a dab of isopropyl alcohol and apply antibiotic ointment.

After removing the tick, monitor your dog for a few days and keep an eye on the bite area to make sure an infection doesn't develop. If you notice changes in his behavior, signs of illness or the bite area gets infected, then it's time to see the vet, and bring the tick along in a plastic bag. ©2025 King Features Synd., Inc.

• No matter how hot
your summer day feels,
you won't actually be able to cook an egg

because you'd need a temperature of at least

Kovels

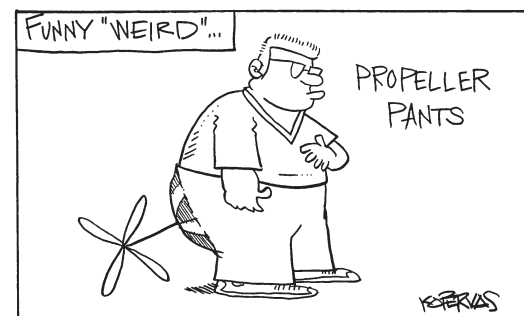

Antiques and Collecting
by Terry and Kim Kovel

Q: I have a print that has been in my family for at least 100 years. I have no idea if it is worth anything or just sentimental. I've researched the artist and found some information. Do you know how I can tell if this is an original or a print?

A: Check your print for an artist's signature and edition number that are written in pencil, not printed on. Sometimes it takes an art expert to determine if a print is original. You may want to contact an art museum in your area or the art department of a college or university for assistance.

Outdoor Opportunities

By COL (Ret.) Grey D. Berrier II

Often Overlooked, Freshwater Mussels are Vital for Healthy PA Waters (Part 2 of 2)

When I was a child, I could have been labeled "curious," because even from an early age, I was extremely interested in exploring outdoors and learning about animals. When an episode of Mutual of Omaha's "Wild Kingdom" or "The Undersea World of Jacques Cousteau" came on, I was probably glued to our TV set with my parents' or grandparents' blessing. Searching my memories, I can't recall a single nature program focusing on freshwater mussels and I also don't remember ever seeing a quality photograph or video of freshwater mussels "in action" during my undergraduate studies at Penn State.

All that comes to mind from our textbooks or lectures are "life cycle" diagrams of freshwater mussels. Well, my world was completely rocked during our May 16 visit to the PA Fish & Boat Commission's Aquatic Conservation Center (ACC) in Union City, when Species Recovery Biologist Scott Ray showed us detailed, high-quality underwater photographs and videos of many of the species of freshwater mussels inhabiting our PA waterways and their utterly fascinating reproductive behavior. Now, some actions to procreate are common across mussel species, but there are many details which are very species specific.

We are talking freshwater mussels here, so there are no courtship rituals or even the need for boy mussel to physically meet girl mussel to perpetuate the species. With typically hundreds or most likely thousands of mussels inhabiting a given stream, creek, or river; when it comes time to reproduce, the male mussels simply release their sperm into the flowing water and it is carried downstream to receptive female mussels. The female's fertilized eggs develop into glochidia, which are the mussel's ultra-tiny larval stage initially visible only under a microscope and measured in microns (only the size of 1/4 of a grain of salt).

This is where things get really interesting and differ remarkably from species to species of freshwater mussels. The pregnant female mussels, sitting partially submerged in the streambed, riverbed, or lakebed have developed species-specific mantle lures across the top of their partially opened shells designed to attract select species of fish. If I hadn't seen the photos and videos myself, I wouldn't have believed it. Let's just say fishing lure manufacturers, who are designing realistic soft plastic lures to attract fishermen and fish, have nothing on these female freshwater mussels. One species' mantle lure appears gray, is a few inches long, and undulates in flowing water. Coupled with a well-placed black dot that looks remarkably like an eye, this mantle lure deceives fish, specifically bass, to think it is a struggling minnow on the bottom and an easy meal. When the fish bites the female mussel's mantle lure, she release her glochidia into the fish's mouth and they are transported to the fish's gills as the fish "breathes." The glochidia become obligate parasites, attaching themselves to the fish's gills for 2 to 3-weeks as they mature and "hitchhike" themselves to new locations as the fish moves throughout the waterway. They eventually drop off to settle on the bottom and grow into adult mussels. The mussel larvae using the fish as a host apparently do not harm the fish in any way. Fish you catch may be transporting mussel larvae.

One species of mussel's mantle lure extends a few inches from their shell via a mucous string and it looks almost like a "Mister Twister" rubber lure dancing in the water to attract fish. Various mussel species have very different mantle lures designed to attract walleye, shad, brook trout, striped bass, eels, or darters as a host. Here in the Shenango River, we have a species of concern, the Pistol Grip mussel, whose mantle lure looks like rotting flesh to attract a very specific host, flathead catfish. (I'm looking forward to receiving a call from Scott Ray with an invitation to join him and his crew in gathering Pistol Grip mussels from the Shenango River sometime this summer for their propagation efforts.) At the ACC in Union City, they not only raise mussels, but they also keep the necessary host fish species on hand.

Recent PA mussel success stories include relocating 160,000 mussels from a prominent bed at Hunters Station a few miles below Tionesta, when they built the new US-62 Bridge across the Allegheny River several years ago. (Many were moved to the Clarion River.) Additionally, there are ongoing efforts to restock mussels in 30-miles of Greene County's Dunkard Creek after a major 2009 contamination event destroyed most aquatic life. (This year's mussel stocking is September 9.) Mussels are vital "biomarkers" indicating the health of our PA waterways. Please check out some YouTube videos on freshwater mussels for yourself. Since visiting the ACC in Union City, I have so much respect for these fascinating creatures, now I'm concerned about stepping on them when I wade!

God Bless, Be Safe, and Great Outdoors!

Visible Traces of Jesus

They could find no corruption in [Daniel], because he was trustworthy and neither corrupt nor negligent. Daniel 6:4. READ Daniel 6:1-10

Scientists from a California university ran experimental molecular swab tests to identify the traits and lifestyle habits of individual cell phone users. They discovered, among other things, the soaps, lotions, shampoos, and make-up that cell phone users used; the type of foods, drinks, and medications they consumed; and the type of clothing they wore. The study allowed the researchers to create a profile of each person's lifestyle.

The administrators in Babylon, figuratively "swabbed" the prophet Daniel's life to try and find any negative traits or lifestyle habits. But he'd served the empire faithfully for nearly seventy years—known to be "trustworthy and neither corrupt nor negligent" (Daniel 6:4). In fact, the prophet was promoted by King Darius as one of "three administrators over" his many governors (vv. 1-2). Perhaps out of jealousy, the other officials were looking for traces of corruption in Daniel so they might be able to get rid of him. He kept his integrity intact, however, and continued to serve and pray to God "as he had done before" (v. 10). In the end, the prophet prospered in his role (v. 28).

Our lives leave visible traces that point to who we are and whom we represent. Although we struggle and aren't perfect, when people around us "swab" our lives, may they find visible traces of integrity and devotion to Jesus as He guides us.

Now Here's A Tip by JoAnn Derson

• "Baking is a science as well as an art. It's about interaction of ingredients and what happens when they mix in certain ways. So this is not so much a tip as a caution. Make sure of your substitutions, and use the right amounts of things. Then your cakes will be light and fluffy and your pastry will be flaky and moist." – B.G. in PA ©2025 King Features Synd., Inc.

• When cooking meat, you have to take care. Here are two tips straight from my local butcher: First, let meats come to room temperature before cooking. It allows the meat to cook more evenly and you won't end up with a cold center and a burnt outside. Secondly, when your meat comes off the grill or out of the oven, give it time to rest before serving. This allows the juices to redistribute throughout the cut of meat, and you'll end up with juicy goodness in every bite.

• The best way to cool canned and bottled drinks down fast is in a mix of ice and water. The water is a better conductor of the cool. Then make your ice last longer and stay colder by sprinkling a little salt on the ice/water mixture.
